MICRONCLEAN APPOINTS ITS FIRST ENVIRONMENTAL DIRECTOR

Micronclean are pleased to announce the appointment of Sophie Harris as Associate Director Quality, Health and Environment. Sophie joins Micronclean after a 14-year career in the water industry where she held positions in Production, Quality, Regulation and Environmental Departments delivering company-wide environmental improvement programmes.

Micronclean has long recognised the importance of environmental sustainability, being one of the first companies to achieve BS7750 accreditation, the precursor to ISO14001. For many years Micronclean's environmental and sustainability activities were captured within our SKIEs values under the banner of Stewardship. Micronclean recognise the need to give even greater focus to the environment, sustainability, and a more circular economy, appointing Sophie Harris to provide Board level leadership and focus to this critical aspect of our business.. To support Sophie, Micronclean will be strengthening its environmental team.

Speaking after her appointment Sophie Harris said:

"I am delighted to have joined Micronclean at this important time and I look forward to delivering long term improvements in all the areas I cover in my new role."

"I am passionate about sustainability and reducing our environmental impacts to meet the needs of today and those of our future generations. As a result, I would like to create a true circular economy to remove waste through implementation of innovative packaging solutions. My ambition is to work in partnership with our customers and communities to create real value to deliver against our joint goals, and most importantly, to protect the environment."
